Max Sepúlveda is a visual artist, artisan, and cultural manager born in 1974 in San Vicente de Tagua Tagua, Chile. He boasts an extensive body of creative work spanning pottery, ceramics, textiles, collaborative art, and audiovisual art direction. His training has involved learning from Latin American master artisans and visual artists, as well as studying at universities and institutes in Chile, Argentina, and Mexico. In addition to producing artworks and conducting workshops, seminars, masterclasses, and demonstrations in cities across these countries, his experience includes collaborative and community-based art projects carried out in the Chilean regions of Antofagasta, Los Ríos, Metropolitan, Valparaíso, and O'Higgins, as well as in Costa Rica, Mexico, New Zealand, Uruguay, and Colombia. The artist views community and collaborative art as a powerful tool for social transformation, therapy, and nourishment for the soul. He draws inspiration from the locations where he creates his individual and collaborative works and conducts knowledge-sharing workshops; through these, he explores themes such as social issues, memory, and natural and cultural heritage, aiming to make visible, value, protect, and revitalize the identities of the territory and the culture he inhabits.
